

With the weather in Israel over Sukkot typically being the best it ever is, more and more families are choosing to spend this holiday in Eretz Yisrael taking advantage of an opportunity to fulfil [even in a small way] the mitzvah of Aliyah LaRegel (the commandment to literally ascend to the Temple Mount in Jerusalem three times a year – Pesach, Shavuot and Sukkot). I am sure that the added advantage of only keeping one day of Chag (and thus eliminating the multiple three-day holidays I mentioned earlier) which many folks enjoy while in Israel has something to do with it as well. Given the delightful weather and continued proliferation of great kosher wineries spread across Israel, visiting a winery or two (or three or four) is high on the priority list of many of my readers. I have been receiving many emails over the last couple weeks inquiring whether this winery or the other is open over Sukkot and whether there was a Sukkah (and food) available on the premises. After fielding over 100 such emails, I emailed all of the kosher wineries and asked them for this information. The chart below includes all the information received to date from the wineries that choose to respond including visiting hours, tasting cost, the existence of a Sukkah and availability of food at many of the wineries. Despite the reduced drinking age in Israel of 18 (and the relative lack of enforcement in this regard), wineries won't include youngsters in the wine tastings and a number of the wineries are providing child-friendly activities to keep the children engaged while the adults enjoy the fruit of the vine in the manner in which it was obviously intended. The chart below includes information in this regard as well (to the extent provided by the wineries).

As behooves any attorney worth his salt there are a few caveats to the list. First, the information was supplied to me directly by the wineries – I cannot vouch for any of the details. Second, the existence on the list is not a recommendation of the wines, the winery of the tour and tasting itself. It is merely my attempt to provide a public service and save myself from responding to the over 100 different emails I have received in the last week or so on this topic. Third, enjoy and Chag Samaech!

Have a great week, Shabbat Shalom and Chag Samaech,

Yossie
